

Cut it down.

With writing this out I see how it can sound like I am preaching about minimalistic point of views but please know I don't intend to come across like that. Today I thrown out a lot of my wardrobe. No particular reason, yeah I think it was a bit of a mess and needed to be cleaned out. Plus with me moving soon it decreases the work I would have to do anyway. I just felt I was holding on to a bit to much these days there was a few things that I needed to cut out.

Shit is getting more and more difficult these days I am finding ways to keep my head down and carry on with my work both my website this blog and some of my projects are going to be getting a lot of attention in the next up coming months.

I have had three days off of work where I have been able to sit down and focus on what I would like to improve that is why you are seeing a brief preview of my new website up currently. If I egt done what I think needs work then that website will be staying and the other repository that I have for it I will be developing the template further into a more visually pleasing template. My old website will soon have its own repository as-well in case some people wanted to download and use that.

Music

For about 2-3 years now I have kept two different playlists on my phone that I listen to on the daily. I have never actually shared these playlists up until now. I have a Soundcloud account that I am hosting these playlists on and updating it with the music that I find. Link will be below and on my website.

Beats V1
Morgan Dark

Chill V4
Morgan Dark