Review of the Lenovo 320s 14"

General

This has been my day-to-day laptop for the last year now and I never got around to writing a review for this laptop. I have a quite a extensive view on this laptop since it has currently had x2 repairs, one of which wasn't the laptops fault it was down to the repair centre that I took it to.

Now my use case may be a bit different to everyone else plus I do have a nice custom built pc that I built at the start of this year for my more extensive tasks. Now as a repair colleague and the web design that I do on the side, there is a lot that I would need a laptop for. I use this laptop in work on my lunch and I use it a lot of the time to and from places on the bus in the car and things like that. I generally connect it to my phone through hotspot in order for me to carry out my work. Now keeping all of this in mind I opted for the I3 7th gen model of this laptop which did come with a SSD and 4 Gb of RAM. I know that they have recently brought out a new version of this laptop last year which looks a lot nicer than the one that I currently have, but I do like the one I currently have.

The laptop its self in nice and light weight no major issues of the portability of the laptop. It has actually came with me in my backpack for the last year straight no issues at all although I would recommend a laptop sleeve, because I currently have a small dent on the top lid of my laptop from lecture books in my bag. Best feature of the hardware of this laptop is the keyboard because it is just a joy to use. I mean I have written a lot of my blog posts on this laptop and also done a lot of college work and university work on this very laptop and I love this keyboard it has the perfect amount of travel and a really great layout. The only gripe about the keyboard is the arrow keys for me because they are not full size arrow keys, but I do not use them that often so it is not that bad. All in all a good portable laptop with enough power for day to day usage as a student/ small time developer.

Do I recommend getting it?

Yes, I would recommend getting this laptop. Although I would probably go for the newer version because due to the fact it has some refinements like the power button not on the keyboard. Some times I do accidently hit the power button and put my laptop to sleep because of that.

Use Case

The things that I use my laptop for is probably the same things that other people would use theirs for social networking, job searching and Netflix. What I do on there regarding coding would be where my use case is a bit different. I use my laptop a lot for development on my projects. Now I currently have three major projects that I am working on two of which are for web development and the other is written in python. I mean on this laptop I have written the most of my blog posts and done most if not all of my web design work on here.

Bundle Purchased

LENOVO IdeaPad 320s-14IKB 14" Laptop - Mineral Grey + Office 365 Personal + LiveSafe Unlimited 2017 - 1 year + Cloud Storage - 2 TB, 1 year

4 items in the bundle

Main product was £699.99, now £649.99.
Bundle saving £50.00

Quantity : 1 ▾

❌ Remove